

14) Stomp the Schoolyard by Amy Rogers—The highly professional Principal Celestia and very serious Vice Principal Luna are walking separately around the empty Canterlot High campus making sure that all is well. They appear at opposite ends of the campus and see each other. Giving each other a sign indicating that everything is okay, they suddenly hear something and stop in their tracks. The women each crane their heads to listen. It's music! The Sonic Rainbooms must be rehearsing.

But hearing the music, Celestia and Luna's eyes lock. Smiles creep across their faces like they're little girls again. Celestia calls out, "Sun/Moon Super Dance Combo Go!" Immediately, the two launch into an amazingly fun and festive dance routine. And though they have not performed this dance for a good 20 years, it's as if they did it yesterday.

Completely cutting loose, Celestia and Luna are having the time of their lives. They're spinning and sashaying, twisting and turning, totally lost in the moment. It's as if they are the only two people on Earth.

Except...they're not. The Principal and Vice Principal realize that there are many pairs of eyes on them. And the music has stopped. The girls from Sonic Rainboom and numbers of other students are staring at Celestia and Luna in shock and amazement. The two women immediately stop dancing, act as if nothing happened and then zip off, leaving only dust in their trail.
