

15) The Mix-fest Club by Josh Haber The P.E. Teacher (perhaps the human version of Iron Will) addresses a gym full of students on the importance of a quality physical education. He calls each of them out on what he feels they would personally benefit from, announcing it in front of the whole class. "You look like you could use a pull up or two," etc. Unfortunately, he only makes it through a few students before a text calls him out of the room. The second he leaves, DJ Pon-3 hits the "Party Mix" button on her laptop and the gym instantly transforms into rave central. The dance party stops just as the teacher returns, but again he is only able to humiliate one more student before another text calls him away. DJ PON-3 hits the "Party Mix" button and starts the rave up again. Suspicious, the teacher opens and closes the door quickly, but is never able to catch the party happening. Finally, the teacher returns and tries to tease DJ PON-3 about being into computers, "I mean you don't make real music. Can you even do a pushup? What is that laptop even good for?" etc. Suddenly another text calls the teacher away. DJ-Pon3 shows the kid in front of her the laptop, and the student comments with a smile that the computer is good for something – DJ PON-3 has been using it send the teacher fake texts. DJ PON-3 winks and the party resumes.
