

15) The Mix-fest Club by Josh Haber The P.E. Teacher (perhaps the human version of Iron Will) addresses a gym full of students on the importance of a quality physical education. He calls each of them out on what he feels they would personally benefit from, announcing it in front of the whole class. "You look like you could use a pull up or two," etc. Unfortunately, he only makes it through a few students before a text calls him out of the room. The second he leaves, DJ Pon-3 hits the "Party Mix" button on her laptop and the gym instantly transforms into rave central. The dance party stops just as the teacher returns, but again he is only able to humiliate one more student before another text calls him away. DJ PON-3 hits the "Party Mix" button and starts the rave up again. Suspicious, the teacher opens and closes the door quickly, but is never able to catch the party happening. Finally, the teacher returns and tries to tease DJ PON-3 about being into computers, "I mean you don't make real music. Can you even do a pushup? What is that laptop even good for?" etc. Suddenly another text calls the teacher away. DJ-Pon3 shows the kid in front of her the laptop, and the student comments with a smile that the computer is good for something – DJ PON-3 has been using it send the teacher fake texts. DJ PON-3 winks and the party resumes.

16) Night School by Josh Haber Rainbow Dash and Rarity walk through the school halls at night. Rarity berates Dash for being irresponsible and forgetting her guitar in music class. Dash explains that it's no big deal; they'll just go pick it up. Rarity wonders if they're even allowed to be there after hours. Dash's response is, "Of course. Haven't you ever heard of night school?" Rarity wonders who would suffer the long, empty, dimly lit hallways just to further their education. Dash says she's being silly, but is obviously spooked as well. Their fears intensify as low, mournful moans echo through the locker-lined halls. Rarity nearly panics and Dash pretends not to hear it, though she jumps at the shadow of a tree stretching in through a window. Finally, the two of them arrive at the music room to find Vice-Principal Luna leading a nighttime rehearsal of a trio of students practicing an eerie requiem. She takes a look at Rarity and Dash and worries that she's frightened them. Rarity denies it by way of teasing Dash for forgetting her guitar. The girls start to leave but Luna stops them, "Ahem." The girls turn to see the vice-principal holding Rarity's keytar. "Forgetting something, Rarity?"