Feeling Pinkie Keen

Twilight wonders what's up when Pinkie shows up wearing an umbrella hat on a day scheduled to be sunny. Pinkie tells her that her 'Pinkie Sense' has been tingling and this particular twitch of her tail means that something's going to fall from the sky. Twilight scoffs till a frog falls onto her face from out of nowhere. After wiping the frog from her face, Twilight has to admit that Pinkie was right. But how? Twilight wants to know how Pinkie does it and won't be satisfied with her vague answer about 'just knowing'. Scholarly Twilight just knows that any problem can be cracked by enough hard study, and that there must be some secret to Pinkie's predictions. She starts to secretly study Pinkie from afar in order to learn the scientific secret to 'intuition' but cannot explain all the strange and silly things that Pinkie just seems to know---and Twilight always seems to bear the brunt of all the funny forecasts Pinkie makes. In the end, Twilight learns that one of the great things about having friends is making use of their talents for your own benefit. And she sends off her letter to the Princess with her umbrella hat firmly in place.

Fluster-Shy

Sweetie Belle has invited her fellow Crusaders over for a sleepover/strategy session but big sister Rarity needs to work all night to finish an order for a very important client. Fluttershy volunteers to babysit the younger ponies, figuring on her natural ability with all creatures great and small. The slumber party is moved to Fluttershy's cottage and the rambunctious Crusaders are soon running rough shod over their timid chaperone. The only thing she can think to do is send them to bed early. All her efforts to corral the Crusaders have left Fluttershy pretty tired herself and she nods off as soon as she's got the others tucked in. The Crusaders take this opportunity to launch a midnight 'vision quest' into the Ever Free Forest in search of their Cutie Marks. Fluttershy wakes up and discovers they're gone, but can she summon the courage to save them from their fool-hardy adventure?

Up, Up and Dismay. (Revised)

The Wonder Bolts announce that they will be holding a "Most Promising Young Flier" competition in Cloudsdale. The winner will be 'crowned' by Princess Celestia herself and get to hang out with the actual Wonder Bolts for a day! Rainbow Dash is raring to go. Her friends are raring to go as well but none of them can actually make the trip to the floating city except Fluttershy. It looks like Rainbow Dash's cheering section will be mighty thin until Twilight figures out a spell to temporarily give the rest of the group wings. (Not feathered Pegasus wings, but pretty, fairy wings.) Unfortunately, she's only able to perform the difficult spell on Rarity before she wears herself out. The rest of them have to settle for the ability to walk on clouds. Rainbow shows her friends the many fanciful wonders of the Cloud City and Rarity basks in the attention her unusual wings generate. Their tour ends at the Air Dome, just in time to catch the Wonder Bolt performance that precedes the "Young Flier" competition. Rarity is so taken with herself at this point that she decides to sign up for the competition, hoping to catch the eye of the Princess. If she can catch Celestia's attention, perhaps she can become Royal Fashion Consultant! Rainbow Dash is steamed at the idea of one of her supposed supporters becoming a competitor but Rarity cannot be talked out of participating. When the actual contest starts, Rarity's preening performance gets in the way of the more serious fliers, eventually causing a mid-air collision between herself and several other contestants. Rainbow Dash ruins her own flying routine in order to save her friend and the other unconscious ponies as they plummet towards the ground. When she awakens, Rarity apologizes for screwing things up. She has learned that you need to allow your friends their moment to shine and not hog the spotlight for yourself. But Rainbow Dash's amazing rescue has caught the eye of the judges and she ends up winning after all!! As Celestia crowns Rainbow Dash, Rarity asks if she might put in a good word for her with the Princess.
