The Royal Apples

When Big Mac finds a battered old crown buried in the fields, Granny Smith knows that he has uncovered an important family artifact. She had always heard that great, great, great, grandpa Macintosh was a King of some kind and now the crown has confirmed it. They're all royalty... and they better start acting like it! Granny Smith has a few ideas regarding how royalty should behave... and none of it happens in an apple field. Soon, the rest of Ponyville buys into the hype and they start treating the whole family like prince and princesses... and Applejack doesn't like it! Applejack and Apple Bloom are stalked by Pony-azzi, invited to tons of parties and forced to behave in a certain way. Applejack is no good at the royal lessons she's getting or the formal events she has to attend and longs to be in the fields again. While she's occupied, it's up to her friends to uncover the real truth behind the crown (Nightmare Night costume) and set her free! (NOTE: This episode might be a good opportunity to explain some of the "princess" mythology that will pay off in our Season finale)
