STRANGER THAN FAN FICTION

Premise by Josh Haber & Michael Vogel

Rainbow Dash is excited to head to a Daring Do fan convention where, for the first time ever, A.K. Yearling is scheduled to appear at a signing for her latest book. At the con, Dash meets DOUBTER NEIGH, who's the exact opposite of a Daring Do super-fan. Doubter thinks the character and, in fact, the entire series is complete and utter nonsense and lives to debunk every aspect of the books. Doubter's biggest complaint: "It's all so incredulous! There's no way any of this could actually happen!" As Dash tries to convince Doubter of the truth (without outing her friend A.K.), they are both swept up in a Daring Do adventure, courtesy of Caballeron and his henchmen. Brought to the jungle by the villain, Dash tries to escape and warn A.K. of Caballeron's plot to steal her most recently recovered artifact, all the while hampered by Doubter's insistence that it is all a ruse on Dash's part to convince him that Daring Do is real. As they make their way through a series of Indy-style obstacles, both Dash and Doubter gain respect for each other's abilities and incite. When they fall into yet another villain's clutches, they are rescued by none other than Daring Do herself, revealing to Doubter that she is, in fact, real. Despite this, Doubter admits that he just doesn't like the books and Dash learns that it's possible to be friends with a pony who absolutely hates something she utterly loves.
