MAUD IN MANEHATTAN

Premise by Nick Confalone

Pinkie Pie has planned a super-amazing surprise for her sister, Maud. There is a one-of-a-kind meteorite that's going to be on display at the Museum of Natural History in Manehattan, but it's only there for a limited time. Luckily it just happens to coincide with one of Maud's weekends off from her dig, so not only has Pinkie Pie scored two tickets to the exhibit, she's planned an entire day of sisterly fun in Manehattan! The only problem is... it's a giant city with a million distractions, diversions, and opportunities to get mixed up in other ponies' business.

Immediately, Pinkie is awestruck by how cool the city is. So is Maud... at the sidewalk is—a masterful blend of calcium and silicon oxides. They're about to make their way to the museum when Pinkie spots... BALLOONS! A PARADE! Pinkie's own distractibility and excitability become their biggest obstacle. E.g., when one of the balloon operators calls in sick... Pinkie volunteers (and loves it!).

Afterwards, Pinkie finds that Maud has wandered into an underground Slam Poetry reading, where Maud takes the stage and delivers a slam poem (about rocks). She wows the hipster audience, and makes enemies with the former slam poet champion, who chases them out.

Time's running out to see the rock! But Pinkie's bubbly nature keeps getting them into trouble. They accidentally get lost in the subway. They accidentally double cross the mob. They accidentally end up starring in a Bridleway show. By the time they finally get to the museum, it's closed. Pinkie doesn't give up. She convinces Maud to follow her as they break in and sneak past lasers and motion detectors. Before they can glimpse the meteorite, they're caught by guards.

Behind bars, Pinkie feels like she messed everything up. Maud must really hate her now, for wasting their whole day instead of getting them to see the rock, because Maud cares about Rocks more than anything in the world, right? Wrong! Maud tells Pinkie that she came on this trip to spend time with her, so it was the PERFECT trip.

In the end, they get off with a warning (apparently they know a "princess"). Pinkie is relieved, but Maud says it wouldn't have been so bad: the sentence would have been three years hard labor on a rock farm. "So awesome."
