WIND BENEATH MY WINGS

Premise by Liza Palmer

Cheerilee introduces a new pony, Filly Keen, to the class, but most everypony finds her awkward demeanor off putting. Scootaloo takes to the earth pony when Filly announces her intention to fly like a princess. Scoot feels like she has plenty of incite to offer a pony who wants to fly but can't. Sweetie Belle and Apple Bloom warn Scootaloo that Filly hasn't asked for help, but Scootaloo presses on, determined to prove that Filly is a prime candidate for Cutie Mark Crusader intervention.

Scoot soon discovers that Filly only wants to fly because she thinks it will make her liked and admired and never feels awkward or out of place – like a princess. Scoot starts to tell Filly that ponies will come to like her for who she is, but gets distracted when she sees Filly's workshop. Filly is a crazy-talented inventor and has built all kinds of things, including mechanical wings that work! Filly admits that she wants to fly for Twilight who will be visiting at the school's upcoming Open House and Scootaloo agrees to help – thinking it will be a great opportunity to show off Filly's incredible skills.

At the Open House, Scoot is excited for everyone to see what an amazing inventor Filly is, but when Filly shows up painted purple and wearing an over-the-top "Princess" outfit Scoot tries to intercede. Filly's wings are incredible all by themselves, but Filly tells her the whole reason she made them was to be like Twilight. Now she's Twilight Sparkle 2.0 and everyone will love her even more than the original model. But when Filly's wings malfunction, it's up to Scootaloo to save the day. Using one of Filly's other inventions, Scoot hops on her scooter and brings the inventor pony back to earth. Devastated that her dream didn't pan out, Filly decides to hang up her tools. Scootaloo insists that Filly has an amazing talent and needs to share with the world. Twilight points out that it was Filly's invention and her friendship with Scootaloo that saved the day. Filly may never fly like a princess, but she doesn't need to. With abilities like hers and friends to encourage them, there's no limit to the future she can invent.
