WANNA BOLT

Premise by Kevin Burke and Chris “Doc” Wyatt

Twilight and Rainbow Dash get called on a map mission. In a town near Ponyville, they meet SKY LIGHT, a filly who dreams of becoming a Wonderbolt, and PURPLE POP, Sky’s best friend, or at least he used to be. Sky has become so focused on applying for the Wonderbolt Academy that she’s stopped spending time with Pop. She even missed Pop’s birthday. With the friends at odds (Pop feeling neglected and Sky feeling like Pop doesn’t support her dream), Twilight and Dash instantly identify their roles: Dash puts in a good word for Sky at the Academy and Twilight jumps in to reconcile the friends.

The good news is that Dash is able to set up an Academy flight test. The bad news is that once she starts working with Sky to prepare, she discovers that Sky is a TERRIBLE FLYER. Meanwhile, Twilight discovers that Pop isn’t really supportive of Sky’s dream. Sure, Sky knows everything there is to know about flying, but Pop knows she’s not a very good flyer and he doesn’t want his friend to be disappointed. He thinks she should give up on flying all together. Twilight dives in, believing that with hard work and determination, any dream is possible. Dash, on the other hand, just doesn’t think that Sky has the stuff. Twilight insists they give it their all and convinces Dash to train Sky for the Academy Flight Test. If anypony can do it, it’s Dash—plus it will prove to Pop that Sky’s dream is possible.

Unfortunately, Sky’s overeager exuberance, coupled with her inability, causes a major problem at the Academy. Twilight realizes that maybe Sky’s dream isn’t really attainable. But when Sky is able to use her vast knowledge of flying to solve the problem (that she caused), it gives Twilight an idea. Twilight and Dash talk to the faculty at the Academy and convince them to make Sky the school’s first ever air traffic controller. Putting her actual talents to use helping the inexperienced flyers at the Academy stay safe, Sky realizes that even though you have to be ready to chase your dreams, you have to be equally ready to change them. And Pop realizes that just because a friend’s dream doesn’t look possible, encouraging them can help them find what they’re meant to do.

In the end, Dash is confused— Why was this a map mission? How did helping Sky and Pop become better friends help all of Equestria? Twilight says she doesn’t know how, but she believes one day they’ll all find out. After all, the friendship between the main six has helped Equestria many times over...
